

The Fourth of July

Written by Bill Tsuda

Good morning, UNAN! Today is Friday, July 5th, 2019.

Yesterday was July 4th. The 4th of July is the American “Independence Day”.

This day is America’s birthday. The United States said they wanted to be independent and free from England on this day in 1776. That means that yesterday, America turned 243 years old. The 4th of July is one of the biggest and most patriotic holidays in America. Everything is red, white and blue, the colors of the American flag. Picnics and barbeques are the most popular ways to celebrate. And at night, people watch fireworks all over the country. The biggest and most famous fireworks show is on the river in New York City. When I was a kid, every 4th of July I could see the fireworks from the roof of my house. Those were nice 4th of July memories for me.
